Abstract. Application of criteria for identifying scriptural reuse demonstrates that John 8:12 is a specific allusion to Isa 9:1. Affirming the often overlooked proposal that the allusion answers the objection to Jesus in 7:52, this paper suggests the allusion serves a multi-layered narrative function. It demonstrates that Jesus’ opponents are ignorant of the portion of Isaiah to which he alludes, undermines them for their failure to know the Scriptures that testify on his behalf by a lexical link from ἐραύνησον in 7:52 to ἐραυνᾶτε in 5:39, and affirms the messianic identity of Jesus in accordance with the purpose of the book.

Key Words: John; Isaiah; light; Galilee; allusion; intertextuality

Introduction

Interpreters have suggested various explanations of Jesus’ self-identification as the light of the world in John 8:12. Yet, despite the features of the verse suggesting a close link with what precedes, many have given little account for how 8:12 functions within the flow of thought in Chapters 7–8 and the narrative of the book. I will argue for the often overlooked proposal that 8:12 specifically alludes to Isa 8:23–9:6 (LXX 9:1–7) to refute the objection to Jesus in 7:52. I will further argue that, by making this allusion, 8:12 serves a multi-layered narrative function to undermine Jesus’ opponents by revealing their failure to know the Scriptures and to affirm Jesus’ identity as Messiah.

Previous Interpretations of John 8:12

John 8:12 most obviously continues the light motif characterizing the first half of the book. Commentators have offered six primary interpretations of the verse that view it as additionally making a reference external to John. Many have suggested associations, or at least close parallels, with light and darkness dualism in Qumran literature\(^1\) or have suggested that it recalls simhat beit hasho’eva during the Feast of Tabernacles as described in \textit{m. Sukkah} 5:1–5 and \textit{t. Sukkah} 4:1–9.\(^2\) Although less common in recent scholarship, some have compared light and darkness imagery in John, including in 8:12, to gnostic or early gnostic dualism.\(^3\) Others associate Jesus’ statement with the lights of Hanukkah, understanding 10:22 to designate the temporal setting of 8:12 through the end of Chapter 10.\(^4\) Still others note the association of light with Torah, primarily in rabbinic literature but also earlier, as in 2 \textit{Bar}. 54:13–14.\(^5\) Finally, many recognize light-darkness imagery in the OT, and sometimes also elsewhere in early Christianity, and view 8:12 as using a common image or as alluding

---

\(^1\) E.g. Raymond E. Brown, \textit{The Gospel according to John (i–xii)} (AB; Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday & Company, 1966) 340. The association of John 8:12 with Qumran literature has come under significant fire. Early on, C.K. Barrett considered the suggested parallel questionable since John and the Qumran literature lack unique corresponding elements and light-darkness imagery also appears in the OT: “Whether however these passages contribute anything to the understanding of the Fourth Gospel is doubtful; even [1QS] 3.7, which contains the expression ‘light of life’ (אור החיים), betrays rather an affiliation with the Old Testament which John shares, and the contrast in 3.20f. (cf. 4.11) between light and darkness is hardly more dualistic than any moral philosopher who distinguishes between good and evil and is prepared to use metaphor in his exposition. John and the Qumran author share the conviction that right and wrong are and remain ultimately distinct; they have little more than this, and their acquaintance with the Old Testament, in common,” C.K. Barrett, \textit{The Gospel according to St John: An Introduction with Commentary and Notes on the Greek Text} (2nd ed.; London: SPCK, 1978) 337. More recently, Richard Bauckham has pointed out several differences in the way in which the imagery of light and darkness is used, and Jörg Frey has thoroughly argued against associating this and other dualistic language in John with Qumran literature. See Richard Bauckham, “The Qumran Community and the Gospel of John,” in \textit{The Testimony of the Beloved Disciple: Narrative, History, and Theology in the Gospel of John} (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2007) 125–136, and Jörg Frey, “Licht aus den Höhlen? Der ‘johanneische Dualismus’ und die Texte von Qumran,” in \textit{Kontexte des Johannesevangeliums: Das vierte Evangelium in religions- und traditionsgeschichtlicher Perspektive} (ed. Jörg Frey and Udo Schnelle; WUNT 175; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2004) 117–203.

\(^2\) E.g. Barrett, \textit{The Gospel according to St John}, 335 (Barrett views the background to combine allusion to this ceremony with other ideas from within and outside Judaism); George R. Beasley-Murray, \textit{John} (WBC 36; Waco, Tex.: Word Books, 1987) 127; Andreas J. Köstenberger, \textit{John} (BECNT; Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2004) 253.

\(^3\) See the discussion and references in Enno Edzard Popkes, “„Ich bin das Licht“ – Erwägungen zur Verhältnisbestimmung des Thomasevangeliums und der johanneischen Schriften anhand der Lichtmetaphorik,” in Frey and Schnelle, \textit{Kontexte des Johannesevangeliums}, 641–674. Popkes himself considers John’s use of the light metaphor “gnosisnah” (664).

generally to various OT passages. These views are not all mutually exclusive, and some interpreters view 8:12 as having multiple references.

None of these explanations, however, accounts for the placement of John 8:12 at the particular point where it appears. Certainly, associating it with simḥat beit hashoʾeva offers a reason for its presence in Chapters 7 and 8 and perhaps particularly after mentioning the last day of the feast in 7:37. However, it does not explain why it occurs at 8:12 rather than closer to 7:37, and the association suffers from additional weaknesses. The description of simḥat beit hashoʾeva in m. Sukkah 5:1–5 and t. Sukkah 4:1–9, although mentioning lamps and torches used during the ceremony, does not place particular emphasis on them or give them any symbolic significance. Furthermore, although John’s many allusions to the OT seem to reflect the expectation that readers would be familiar with the Jewish scriptures, an audience that needed Jew-Samaritan tensions explained in 4:9 and might not have known that the water jars in 2:6 were for Jewish purification would not likely have picked up on a reference to this rite. The connection may have evoked additional significance in the minds of readers familiar with the ceremony, but it does not likely represent the primary significance of the verse.

John 8:12 as Allusion to Isa 8:23–9:6

Could John 8:12, however, primarily combine an allusion to a specific OT text with the book’s light motif, and do its features and textual context support reading it as such?

---

7 Whether the description reflects actual practice when the temple was standing is also uncertain. See the qualifications and discussion of the rite in Jeffrey L. Rubenstein, The History of Sukkot in the Second Temple and Rabbinic Periods (BJS 302; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1995), 103–106, 131–152.

8 As Richard Bauckham, who is more positive concerning the likelihood of an allusion to the rite, observes, “Readers with this knowledge would certainly benefit from it in their reading of these chapters, but the chapters are nevertheless quite intelligible to readers who lack this knowledge,” Bauckham, The Testimony of the Beloved Disciple, 122.

Although obscured by the later insertion of the Pericope Adulterae, 8:12 continues the dispute concerning Jesus at the end of John 7. As also suggested by a few others who have often been overlooked, I propose that 8:12 deliberately recalls the language of Isa 9:1, הָעָם הַהֹלְכִים בַחֹשֶׁךְ רָאוּ אוֹר גָדוֹל יֹשְבֵי בְאֶׁרֶץ צַלְמָוֶׁת אוֹר נָגַהְתָם (וֹ λαβַּס δὲ πορεύομενος ἐν σκότει, ἠδετε φῶς μέγα· οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐν χώρᾳ καὶ σκιᾷ βανάτου, φῶς λάμψει ἐφ’ ὑμᾶς). It thus answers the objections to Jesus’ Galilean origin by the Pharisees in the immediately preceding verse (7:52) and earlier by some in the crowd in 7:41. This allusion draws on the mention of גְלִיל הַגוֹיִם (Γαλιλαία τῶν ἐθνῶν; “Galilee of the nations”) in Isa 8:23 and the prediction of the birth of a Davidic ruler as the passage continues through Isa 9:6 to show that Jesus, as the Messiah, not only can, but must be from Galilee. Barnabas Lindars offers the same argument, although with slight hesitation. Philip Comfort, in a three-page article, and Craig R. Koester also make this proposal, apparently independently and without any additional supporting arguments. In his commentary on John, Hartwig Thyen, although associating 8:12 particularly with Isa 42:6 in an earlier article, follows Lindars, adding that 11 In the NRSV, “The people who walked in darkness have seen a great light; those who lived in a land of deep darkness—on them light has shined.” English translations of biblical texts throughout are taken from the NRSV. The text of Greek Isaiah is from Joseph Ziegler, Isaias, vol. 14 of Septuaginta: Vetus Testamentum Graecum (Göttingen, Germany: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1983). Note that the Greek of Isaiah varies in its rendering of על של יד with participles of πορεύομαι or κάθημαι, the latter likely resulting from harmonization with Matt 4:16, as noted to me by one of the editors of NovT.

---

8:12 makes a dual allusion to Isa 9:1 (9:2) and Isa 42:6. Köstenberger also briefly mention this view non-committedly, Motyer by citing Lindars and noting the presence of ὅν in 8:12, and Köstenberger by citing Motyer.

Craig Keener, who, unlike many other writers, notes this proposal, objects, “But light is too familiar a biblical image to limit ourselves to this one source when John 8:12 fails to give clearer clues that point to it.” Clearer clues do emerge, however, through careful reading with criteria for recognizing use of a previous text in mind. The suggested allusion may be analyzed using William Tooman’s principles for determining “deliberate literary borrowing”: uniqueness, distinctiveness, multiplicity, thematic correspondence, and inversion.

Imagery of light and darkness is by no means distinctive or unique, as Keener’s objection notes. However, Jesus’ statement after his self-predication in 8:12 that ὁ ἀκολουθῶν ἐμοί οὐ μὴ περιπάτῃ ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ, ἀλλ’ ἔξει τὸ φῶς τῆς ζωῆς (“Whoever follows me will never walk in darkness but will have the light of life”) uniquely corresponds to the passage from Isaiah. Isa 9:1 is the only verse in the OT containing the verb בָּהָר and the noun בָּשָׁן that negates people walking in darkness due to the presence of a light. It is the only one of four

---

15 Thyen, Das Johannesevangelium, 422–423.

18 William A. Tooman, Gog of Magog: Reuse of Scripture and Compositional Technique in Ezekiel 38–39 (FAT 2/52; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2011) 27–31. While Tooman’s focus on recognizing implicit scriptural reuse, particularly in Ezekiel, differs in some respects from the identification of an allusion to Isa in a NT gospel text, his principles are nevertheless useful for identification.

19 All statistical and distribution information was obtained through searches in the Groves-Wheeler Westminster Morphology and Lemma Database 4.14 (Chestnut Hill 2010) and the BibleWorks LXX/OG Morphology and Lemma Database (Norfolk 2001) using BibleWorks 9 (Norfolk 2013). While the LXX is a scholarly construct and discussion of the occurrence of words in the Hebrew and Greek versions of the OT verses in the OT containing הָלַכּ, חֹשֶׁךְ, and אֹר that positively describes people not walking in darkness (Job 29:3, although also positive, speaks about walking in darkness by God’s light rather than not walking in darkness).\textsuperscript{20} Turning to another word for light, Isa 9:1 is the only verse in the OT containing הָלַכּ, חֹשֶׁךְ, and נֹגַה. Other terms for darkness, צַלְמָוֶּה and צַלָּמָה, only occur with הָלַכּ in Isa 42:16 and in Job 10:21, Ps 23:4, Isa 9:1, and Jer 2:6, respectively.

However, in Isa 42:16, הָלַכּ occurs in the Hiphil to speak of God bringing the blind in a way they do not know in a separate phrase from the statement אָשִים מַחְשָךְ לִפְנֵיהֶׁם לָאוֹר (“I will turn the darkness before them into light”) later in the verse, and Job 10:21, Ps 23:4, and Jer 2:6 make no mention of light, leaving Isa 9:1 alone. אֲפֵלָה and the Piel of הָלַכּ occur together in Isa 59:9, which appears to draw from the imagery of earlier parts of Isa, such as 9:1.

However, here Israel, suffering as the result of its sin, desires justice and light but finds none, creating a related but different picture from Isa 9:1 and, indeed, from John 8:12. Searches for all combinations of πορεύομαι or περιπατέω with σκοτία, σκότος, and φῶς in the LXX yield the same results. Mention of Galilee by name in Isa 8:23 and John 7:52 also strengthens the unique correspondence between the two passages.

The principle of multiplicity increases the likelihood of this allusion when considering either John’s use of Isaiah or the early interpretation of Isa 8:23–9:6. Marked quotations of Isaiah appear in 1:23 (Isa 40:3), 6:45 (Isa 54:13), 12:38 (Isa 53:1), and 12:40 (Isa 6:10).

Many acknowledge that the programmatic “I am” statements in John derive at least in part \textsuperscript{20} The other two verses are Isa 59:9 and Lam 3:2, both of which speak of walking in darkness rather than in light.

from the statements in the latter chapters of Isaiah. Although its identification of citations and allusions is imprecise and I would disagree with its analysis at points, the listing of over forty citations and allusions to Isaiah in John in NA highlights John’s significant use of Isaiah. Andrew Lincoln has also drawn attention to the use of Isaianic language and imagery throughout John in discussion of the gospel’s lawsuit motif.

I will not discuss thematic correspondence here since the narrative function I propose for the allusion will relate the themes of the two texts, and John 8:12 does not exhibit inversion. However, the sequence of elements in Isa 8:23–9:1 and John 7:52–8:12 is identical. Without the self-predicating statement in 8:12, both contain the elements Galilee, walking, darkness, and light in identical order.

Despite these links suggesting a deliberate allusion, many writers do not mention the possibility of Isa 9 as any kind of background to John 8:12 at all, even in combination with other OT light-darkness imagery. Such writers include Walter Bauer, George R. Beasley-

---

38 Morris, The Gospel according to John, 436–439. This is despite his statement that “it must always be borne in mind that light is a common theme in both Old and New Testaments, so that it is not necessary for us to find the source of Jesus’ great saying in any non-biblical place” (437).

However, the allusion’s explanatory power for the placement of 8:12 where it appears in John and the narrative function it would play in the book further strengthen the likelihood of the allusion, and it is to this that we now turn.

The Function of John 8:12 as Allusion

As mentioned above, the allusion to Isa 8:23–9:6 in John 8:12 serves to answer the objection by the Pharisees in 7:52, ἐκ τῆς Γαλιλαίας προφήτης οὐκ ἐγείρεται (“no prophet is to arise from Galilee”). In this final section, I will consider how this link accounts for additional features of 8:12 otherwise unexplained and will further explore how this response functions to undermine Jesus’ opponents according to some of the book’s larger themes.

Besides the proposed allusion, other features of John 8:12 suggest a link with what precedes, specifically two features of its opening words: the phrase πάλιν οὖν and the pronoun αὐτός. οὖν often indicates inference, which would tie 8:12 logically to the preceding. One could argue that οὖν holds too much semantic flexibility and could mean little more than “then,” particularly in John where it occurs most frequently. In any case, it suggests continuation. The proposed link with the dispute concerning Jesus at the end of Chapter 7

---

45 Notably, Westcott, who unlike many others, draws attention to the presence of οὖν and suggests that it should be rendered “therefore,” can only explain the link between 8:12 and 7:52 by saying, “The opinions about Jesus were divided. The rulers were blinded by their prejudices. Jesus therefore traces back doubt and unbelief to want of inner sympathy with Himself,” Westcott, The Gospel according to St. John, 127, bold type in original.
also accounts for ἀὑτοῖς in 8:12. Rather than lacking an antecedent, it may refer back to those Jesus has already been addressing as he again (πάλιν) speaks to them, or perhaps, though less likely, back to the Φαρισαίοι (7:45, 47, 48) consulting together at the end of Chapter 7 and explicitly mentioned again in 8:13.

Nevertheless, many commentators do not mention any connection between 8:12 and the objection to Jesus’ having come from Galilee at the end of Chapter 7, including Barrett,\textsuperscript{46} Bauer,\textsuperscript{47} Beasley-Murray,\textsuperscript{48} Bernard,\textsuperscript{49} Brodie,\textsuperscript{50} Brown,\textsuperscript{51} Bruce,\textsuperscript{52} Bultmann,\textsuperscript{53} Busse,\textsuperscript{54} Carson,\textsuperscript{55} R. Alan Culpepper,\textsuperscript{56} Dodd,\textsuperscript{57} Lightfoot,\textsuperscript{58} MacGregor,\textsuperscript{59} Sanders and Mastin.\textsuperscript{60}

\textsuperscript{46} Barrett, The Gospel according to St John, 335–338.

\textsuperscript{47} Bauer, Johannes, 87.

\textsuperscript{48} Beasley-Murray, John, 126–129.

\textsuperscript{49} Bernard, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Gospel according to St. John, 291–293.

\textsuperscript{50} Brodie, The Gospel according to John, 323–324.

\textsuperscript{51} Brown, The Gospel according to John (i–xii), 340, 343–344.

\textsuperscript{52} Bruce, The Gospel of John, 188.

\textsuperscript{53} Bultmann, Das Evangelium des Johannes, 260–261.

\textsuperscript{54} Busse, Das Johannesevangelium, 164.

\textsuperscript{55} Carson, The Gospel according to John, 337–339.

\textsuperscript{57} Dodd, Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel, references to 8:12 on 54, 130, 185, 317, 375, 377.

\textsuperscript{58} Lightfoot, St. John’s Gospel: A Commentary, 189.

\textsuperscript{60} Sanders and Mastin, A Commentary on the Gospel according to St John, 218–219.
By not recognizing the allusion and how it accounts for the placement of 8:12, many place a break before 8:12, severing the logical connection with what precedes, and some find difficulty explaining the position of 8:12. Waetjen calls 8:12 “an awkward transition from 7:45–52.” Bultmann and Siegert see so little connection with the preceding that they place 8:12 after 9:41 and follow it with 12:44b–50, the latter stating that πάλιν in 8:12 “macht den Eindruck einer Verlegenheit und hat wohl etwas ursprünglich Passenderes ersetzen müssen.”

However, the allusion may play a greater role in John than merely a simple defense demonstrating that Jesus was not disqualified by coming from Galilee; it undermines his opponents at their very point of pride and affirms the testimony of the Scriptures to Jesus. Earlier in John 7, some members of the divided crowd voice the same objection to Jesus from their knowledge of Scripture: οὐχ ἡ γραφὴ εἶπεν ἃτι ἐκ τοῦ σπέρματος Δαυὶδ καὶ ἀπὸ Βηθλεὲμ 63 Siegert, Das Evangelium des Johannes in seiner ursprünglichen Gestalt, 385–386.

Yet when those sent to arrest Jesus return to the chief priests and Pharisees in amazement at how Jesus speaks, the Pharisees retort, ἀλλὰ ὁ ὀχλός οὗτος ὁ μὴ γινώσκων τὸν νόμον ἐπάρατος εἶσιν (“But this crowd, which does not know the law—they are accursed,” 7:49), dismissing the foolish crowd as accursed and ignorant of the Law. When Nicodemus appeals to the Law to give Jesus a fair hearing, the other Pharisees do not flatly state that coming from Galilee disqualifies Jesus, but tell Nicodemus, ἐραύνησον καὶ ἴδε ὅτι ἐκ τῆς Γαλιλαίας προφήτης οὐκ ἐγείρεται (“Search and you will see that no prophet is to arise from Galilee,” 7:52). Their use of ἐραύνησον and Jesus’ subsequent appeal to Scripture to speak of himself in 8:12 recall the only other occurrence of ἐραυνάω in John.

In 5:39–40, Jesus says to his opponents, ἐραυνάτε τὰς γραφάς, ὅτι ύμεῖς δοκεῖτε ἐν αὐταῖς ζωὴν αἰώνιον ἔχειν· καὶ ἐκεῖνα εἰσίν αἱ μαρτυροῦσαι περὶ ἐμοῦ· καὶ οὐ θέλετε ἐλθεῖν πρὸς με ἵνα ζωὴν ἔχητε· καὶ οὐθέτες ἔχετε περὶ ἐμοῦ· καὶ ἐκεῖνα εἰσίν αἱ μαρτυροῦσαι περὶ ἐμοῦ· καὶ οὐ θέλετε ἐλθεῖν πρὸς με ἵνα ζωὴν ἔχητε (“You search the scriptures because you think that in them you have eternal life; and it is these that testify on my behalf. Yet you refuse to come to me to have life”). A series of similarities between these two passages suggest a deliberate link. In Chapter 5, Jesus speaks of searching by the Ἰουδαῖοι in Jerusalem who are seeking to kill him (5:16). In Chapters 7 and 8, Jesus’ opponents again seek to kill him (7:1, 19; 8:37, 40) and tell one of their own to search. The object of search in both passages should properly be the Scriptures, although by the omission of τὰς γραφάς in 7:52, John may highlight how Jesus’ opponents, even as they condemn the crowd for ignorance of Scripture, overlook it themselves. In both passages, Jesus’ opponents have failed to see how the Scriptures speak of him. In both, the result of seeing Jesus in the Scriptures is life. In 5:39–40, Jesus says, καὶ ἐκεῖνα εἰσίν αἱ μαρτυροῦσαι περὶ ἐμοῦ· καὶ οὐ θέλετε ἐλθεῖν πρὸς με ἵνα ζωὴν ἔχητε (“and it is they that testify on my behalf. Yet you refuse to come to me to have life”). In 8:12, Jesus affirms that those who follow him ἔξει τὸ φῶς τῆς ζωῆς (“will have the light of life”). Additionally, the most recent occurrence of φῶς in John prior to 8:12 is in 5:35. Although φῶς speaks of John the Baptist in the earlier verse, it may further link the two passages. This link likely explains the insertion of an explicit mention of Scripture in 7:52 in Codex Bezae and Codex Washingtonianus, as well as the Old Latin, Clementine Vulgate, Sahidic, and Lycopolitonic.70

Thus, by the allusion in 8:12, Jesus not only ripostes an objection, he undermines his opponents by revealing that they know the Scriptures even less than the crowd they condemn and reaffirms that the Scriptures speak of him. It continues the theme of testimony to Jesus from the Scriptures established by the many allusions to the OT in John and explicitly in 2:22; 5:39, etc. Several commentators note the use of ἐραυνάω in the two passages but without noting all of these parallels nor perceiving how this recollection of John 5 further undermines Jesus’ opponents through the allusion in 8:12.71 Lindars notes the link to 5:39 in light of the allusion to Isaiah but does not provide further support for it or develop it beyond 71 Barrett, The Gospel according to St John, 332; Bernard, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Gospel according to St. John, 290; Brodie, The Gospel according to John, 322; Bultmann, Das Evangelium des Johannes, 235, 235n5, implicitly Sanders and Mastin, A Commentary on the Gospel according to St John, 218. As mentioned above, Thyen notes both very briefly in Das Johannesevangelium, 422–423. Bauer notes the use of the word in 5:39 but dismisses a link from 7:52 back to it since the Scriptures mentioned a prophet from Galilee in 2 Kgs 14:25 and since 2 Kgs 10:23 LXX (4 Kgs 10:23) contains a similar phrase without reference to Scripture; Walter Bauer, Johannes, vol. 2 of Die Evangelien (ed. J.C.B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck): Tübingen. J.C.B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck): 1912) 84. Others not noting any connection between 7:52 and 5:39 include Beasley-Murray, John, 121, although he explains the searching as specifically a searching of “the Scriptures”; Brown, The Gospel according to John (i–xii), 330; Bruce, The Gospel of John, 185–186; Busse, Das Johannesevangelium, 163–164; Köstenberger, John, 244; Lightfoot, St. John’s Gospel, 185–186; Morris, The Gospel according to John, 434; Siegert, Das Evangelium des Johannes in seiner ursprünglichen Gestalt, 350; Waetjen, The Gospel of the Beloved Disciple, 233; Wuest, The Gospel according to St. John, 125; Witherington, John’s Wisdom, 174. MacGregor, The Gospel of John, 210 may recognize the use of the word in the two passages without explicitly noting it since he inserts “the Scriptures” in parentheses after “Search” in his comments. Similarly Carson, John, 332 and Schnelle, Das Evangelium nach Johannes, 166 say that Nicodemus is told to search the Scriptures without referencing 5:39.

the mere citation of 5:39 with the simple statement that “there is a deliberate irony, for John knows well that Jesus’ Galilean origin is in accordance with the messianic prophecy of Isa.
9.1f.”72

One final question: inasmuch as Jesus makes a messianic claim in 8:12, what other significance may lie in the Pharisees’ objection specifically to a prophet in 7:52?73 Without addressing what ideas concerning an eschatological prophet references to “the prophet” in John may reflect, a few observations concerning the designation “prophet” and its relation to “Christ” in John suggest a further layer of irony.

Although Jesus affirms his prophetic role in 4:44 by testifying that προφήτης ἐν τῇ ἴδιᾳ πατρίδι τιμὴν οὐκ ἔχει (“a prophet has no honor in the prophet’s own country”), every other occurrence of the word in John appears in a context making a reference to the prophets of the past, distinguishing prophet from Messiah, or presenting the view of Jesus as prophet as inadequate or incomplete. Beginning from the most positive, 1:45 and 6:45 refer to “the prophets” in the plural to speak about what was written in Scripture. In the former, this explicitly concerns the Messiah. Similarly, identification of “Isaiah the prophet” precedes the quotation from Isa 40 in 1:23 and Isa 53 in 12:38. In the next category, 1:21 and 25 distinguish ὁ προφήτης from ὁ χριστός in what appears to be descending order from Christ, to Elijah, to “the prophet.” Similarly, 7:40 expresses the confusion of the crowd when some say of Jesus, οὗτος ἐστιν ἀληθῶς ὁ προφήτης (“This is really the prophet”), while others say in the next verse, οὗτος ἐστιν ὁ χριστός (“This is the Messiah”). The words of 7:40 repeat those of 6:14, where the people, full of multiplied bread and fish, say in their inadequate understanding, οὗτος ἐστιν ἀληθῶς ὁ προφήτης ὁ ἐφεξῆς εἰς τὸν κόσμον (“This is indeed the 72 Lindars, The Gospel of John, 305.

73 The following discussion derives from conversation with Jamie Davies.
prophet who is to come into the world”), only to have their efforts at coronation disappointed by the elusive Jesus, leading to offense and their abandonment of him by the end of the chapter.

Two passages in John that show a progression from inadequate, or incomplete, acknowledgement of Jesus as prophet to his claim to be Messiah deserve particular note. προφήτης occurs only one other time prior to 7:52 when the Samaritan woman, shocked by Jesus’ knowledge of her personal affairs, says to him in 4:19, κύριε, θεωρῶ ἐτι προφήτης εἶ σύ (“Sir, I see that you are a prophet”). This occurrence of the word is particularly significant, since the passage identifies her acknowledgment of Jesus as prophet to be inadequate and shows him leading from it to his claim to be Messiah. When the woman goes on to speak of the future coming of the Messiah, Jesus replies in 4:26, ἐγώ εἰμι, ὁ λαλῶν σοι (“I am he, the one who is speaking to you”). A similar progression appears in Chapter 9. When asked what he says about Jesus, the man, healed of his blindness, replies in 9:17, προφήτης ἐστίν (“He is a prophet”). After continued debate about Jesus, in which the man reasons from saying he does not know whether or not Jesus is a sinner to saying that Jesus must be from God, and the man’s ejection, Jesus asks the man in 9:35, σὺ πιστεύεις εἰς τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου; (“Do you believe in the Son of Man?”). When the man asks who this Son of Man is, Jesus replies in 9:37, καὶ ἐώρακας αὐτὸν καὶ ὁ λαλῶν μετὰ σοῦ ἐκεῖνος ἔστιν (“You have seen him, and the one speaking with you is he”), leading to the man confessing belief and bowing before him.

When the Pharisees object to a prophet arising from Galilee in 7:52, they use an inadequate designation for Jesus in their rejection of him.74 They will not even allow that a prophet comes from Galilee and, by inference, even less would they think the Messiah could come from there. Here again, ironically, they appear in a lesser light than the crowd they condemn. The crowds had at least questioned whether the Christ could come from Galilee on the basis of Scripture in 7:41–42. If yet a further layer of irony lies under 7:52 and 8:12, it may be that of the Pharisees entirely missing the point in their objection. They deny that Jesus is a prophet, but what he claims for himself is different from and higher than being a prophet. The two remaining occurrences of προφήτης in the book, those in the plural in the continuation of the conversation in 8:52 and 8:53, again present Jesus as greater than the prophets. Jesus’ opponents question who he thinks he is in response to his claim that those who keep his word will not see death forever. They ask, μὴ σὺ μειζόνοι εἶ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν Ἅβραάμ, ὡς τοὺς ἀπέθανον; καὶ οἱ προφήται ἀπέθανον. τίνα σεαυτὸν ποιεῖς; (“Are you greater than our father Abraham, who died? The prophets also died. Who do you claim to be?”), leading to Jesus’ statement in 8:58, πρὶν Ἅβραάμ γενέσθαι ἐγώ εἰμι (“before Abraham was, I am”).

---

Conclusion

Jesus’ claim in John 8:12 to be the light of the world, according to my proposal, need not be awkwardly disconnected from what precedes. Nor do we need to seek for its primary significance by appealing to Qumran or gnostic literature with questionable parallels that may not even have been known to its audience, nor even to the use of lights during the Feast of Tabernacles. Rather, through a deliberate OT allusion, Jesus’ claim affirms his own legitimacy by answering an objection of his opponents, reveals their failure to know the Scriptures in which they pride themselves, and unmask their blindness to recognize him in the Scriptures. Yet the allusion also plays into the program of the book as a whole. By using

---

75 This was suggested to me by Jamie Davies.
the language of Isa 8:23–9:1 and thereby recalling the messianic interpretation of the passage as it continues through Isa 9:6 to speak of a coming son who would sit perpetually on David’s throne and be called Wonderful Counselor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, and Prince of Peace, Jesus makes the startling claim about himself repeated throughout John. To combine the book’s statement of purpose with Jesus’ words in 8:12, the Christ, the Son of God, is Jesus, and the one who follows him will not walk in darkness but will have the light of life. Why? Because he is the light of the world who has come from Galilee.